Jafra for Relief and Youth Development

Summer activities at Syria's Jafra Centers officially began with a variety of social and leisure activities, including sports, arts and crafts, chess, recycling, folklore, movies, and theatre. Participants maintain a minimal level of literacy and numeracy abilities in the meantime so they won't forget anything when the new school year starts.

Rooftops thrive in the summer and can generate an abundance of crops, herbs, and flowers if they are regularly irrigated. Participants in the urban rooftop project are now taking the initiative and planting other crops that weren't offered by the programme. For instance, they plant potatoes, mulukhié, and eggplant. It's going great, too! Jafra is pleased to see how the participants have taken ownership of and dedication to this initiative.

Awareness is the key when it comes to health and healthy behaviours. One of the many initiatives that Jafra in Qudsaya carries out in its centre is raising awareness of health-related concerns. The local population is benefiting from discussions on female cancers, birth control, and reproductive health.

The last batches of participants received in-kind kits as part of the conclusion of Jafra TVET's activities in Khaldeh. For instance, the livestock participants got chicken and breeding supplies. Raising your own poultry can help alleviate food poverty in present Lebanon. We believe that by having developed new skills, more families will be able to sustainably afford sufficient, nourishing meals.
